"Der Raven."

Vonce upon a midnight dreary, as I come home purty beery,
Und laid me down ubon der sofa, und purty soon pegan to shnore;
I thought I heard some beobles talking und a noise like some von valking
On der new laid "Nicholas Bafement," on der outside off my door;
On der vooden "Nicholas Bafement," on der outside off my door,
Only dis und someting more.

Yes, extinctly I remember, id vas der ninety-fourth ov Octember,
Und each "Nicholas Bafement member" had peen a week outside my door;
I hoped dey'd pe away to-morrow, but I thought I'd dry und borrow
Two or tree fife dollar Villiams, 'cause I didn't haf no more;
But dey all said dey vas busted, so I didn't got some more,
Only dis und someting more.

"Sir," I said, "you vill oxcoose me, und I know you von't abuse me,
But it vill so much amuse me, ov you told me please some more,
Vy you come to-night, ahem! ven id's dwelve o'clock, P. M?
'Cause der neighbors you vill vake dem knocking at my up-shtairs door,"
I took der lighd and bulled der knob, und obened out my up shtairs door,
Only noting und noting mere.

Und I thought dot awful funny, und again I cried out, "Sonny,
Ov you haf got bienty money, come inside und close der door."
But efferyting vas yust so quiet, und I came back mid der lighd,
Und sat on der sofa by id, und heerd der same noise like before;
Heerd some feller knocking vildly on de oudside ov my door.
Und I vent up shtairs vonce more.

Den der door I obened videly, ven some man rushed in quite vildly
In a vay I didn't tink politely, inside ov my oudside door;
Und I said id's some poor duffer, vat for gotten tighd must suffer.
Und der very shtriet polices to catch him by my door,
He euchred Matsell's shtriet bolices on der outside ov my door;
Only dis und someting more.

Soon I lit another lighd, cause I vant to be bolite,
But hoped he vouldn't shtay all nighd, sitting on mine barlor floor,
Ven all ov a suddenly I bethought me, and mine inshtincts quickly taught me,
Ov a club, vat I had pought me, vat vould shtard him off my floor;
Ov a leetle hickory glub shtick, vat vould shtard him off my floor,
Only dis and someting more.

But I thought pefore I'd use him, pefore I shtarted to abuse him.
But my eyes they shouldn't lose him I vould shpoke to him some more;
To see ov he had blayed some game, so I nearer to him came,
Und I told him "Vat's your name? so ve can gonverse some more:
Tell me vot is on der door-blate on der inside ov your door?"
Und he answered, "Nefermore."

Den I thought der air grew thicker, shmeld ov dis bad five cent liquor,
Till id made me fell much sicker; id vas now 'bound haf-pasd four;
Und I said, inside mine mind, dot I vouldn't pe so kind,
But would bounce him from pehind outside ov mine chamber door,
Dot I'd take him vrom de neck, und put him outside ov my door,
But something sung oud, "Nefermore."

"Come look at me and take mine varning, for dis old shtuff your life your pawning
You'd haf a shvelled head in der morning, but yu vont got tighd some more;
Got up, I say, und go shcott free; got up I say, und led me pe,
Or I'll make murder by der second degree, und dot's all righd by der new law;
I'll go to Sing Sing, but got bardoned ven I'm dere tree years or four,"
But he answered, "Nefermore."

Dot's blayed oud, you awful loafor, you vot is purty much tighd all ofer;
Take your feed off my new sofa; take yourself oud ov my door;
My shvallow-head coat, see how you've torn her so as I cannot no more pawn her,
Dere's a beer saloon upon der corner; don't you blease come back some more;
Go und shtay und on der corner, und don't you blease come back some more,
But he answered, "Nefermore."

Und as I'm wriding he is shtaying, and no sylabub is saying,
Und no kind ov board is paying, though he owes tree vecks or more;
Und in his voice dere is a rumble, like a bee vat's got a bumble;
But dot man vill nefer tumble, and he vont go home some more;
So I take him by der season, for he vont go home some more,
Only dis and noting mere.

The Story-Teller.

THE MISSING WHALEMAN.

BY ROGER STARBUCK.

Our first mate was in a towering passion. The captain's son, William Wren, fourth officer, and the mate's boat steerer, had called him a white-headed old lubber, because he, (the first mate) had struck the cabin boy—Tom Cutter—a favorite with Wren

In truth the poor youth had not deserved the blow he received. He had accidentally spilt a cup of hot coffee which, in the cold latitude of the Arctic ocean, was often the first thing partaken of by the mate when he came on deck in the morning.

But the poor cabin boy is often a mark for the spleen of all hands. From the captain to the cook he is kicked and cuffed whenever his elders happen to feel like exercising themselves in this manner.

Aboard merchant vessels boys are often little better treated than dogs with brutal masters. They are over-worked, not only by the officers but also by the old sailors, who make them do the "dirty work" aboard ship.

That is the reason why a sensible seamen will never advise, nor approve of, boys going to sea.

Besides these disadvantages, a lad going away from kind, christian parents, often becomes demoralized by the coarse associates with whom he mingles. The bad treatment alone to which he is subjected has this effect.

It would have fared much worse with the cabin boy aboard the Tigress—of which vessel I am now writing—but for the kindness of Miss Temple, the captain's niece, a beautiful young lady of seventeen, who had accompanied her uncle ostensibly for her health, but in reality, if the truth must be known, that she might be near William Wren, whom she deeply loved and to whom she was engaged.

Marian Temple was indeed a lovely creature. Her long, brown hair fell down her shoulders in heavy masses; her neck was as white as marble, her eyes large and of a hazel color, lighted her regular yet ever varying features with a scintillating sort of glow, which was well calculated to attract.

Often this young lady would interfere where a rope's end was about being applied to little Jack's back.

On the morning in question Marian had not yet come up. William, however, emerged from the companionway to see the lad crying.

He questioned him, to learn that Mr. Barkton had struck him.

"You are a white-headed old lubber," said Wren, to the first mate; "how would you like to be struck in that way, yourself," pointing at the lad's bruised and swollen lip.

"It's none of your business," screamed Barkton.

"Yes it is: it is the business of every humane man to prevent a lad's being struck by any person except by his own father."

"And so you—an officer here, yourself, wish to uphold the little scamp above me!"

As he spoke he paced the deck, furiously.

When the captain came up a moment later, Barkton told him that his son had interfered between him and his duty.

"How is that, Bill?" said the captain.

Bill at once explained.

"I would not have blamed the lad," he added, "had he picked up a hand-spike, and retaliated by striking the mate over the head with it."

"You wouldn't, eh?" screamed Barkton. "Just hear that, captain!"

"You go too far, Bill," said the skipper.

"I will go yet farther," answered Bill, and say that I, myself, have a mind to chastise him for it."

The mate was now unable to contain himself.

He shook his clenched fists at Wren, declaring that he would kill him, if he ever laid hands on his person.

Wren laughed.

The captain here interposed.

"Come men," said he, "don't let us have any more of this. We are not here to fight among ourselves, but to fight whales."

Wren, for his father's sake, said no more. He and the first mate, however, felt, from that moment, that they were enemies.

Miss Temple soon heard of what had occurred.

One evening she was by her lover's side on the quarter deck, looking very pretty in her thick fur coat, round velvet hat, and red feather.

In the east the moon was just rising, throwing a flood of silver light over the smooth water and flooding the numerous bergs floating by with an almost unearthly radiance.

"William," said Marian, gently, "I feel very uneasy about it, and would much rather you would no longer act as boat-steerer for the first mate."

"And why not?"

"I don't know, but, somehow, I feel very uneasy about it, and would much rather you belonged to some other boat. I have seen Barkton, ever since your difficulty with him, look at him in a way that shows that he would injure you if he could."

"You are mistaken. The man has his faults, but I don't think he would hold a grudge in that way."

"It's hard to tell," said Marian, shaking her pretty head. "Promise me that you will get removed to some other boat."

"I cannot promise you that," he answered. "I have given my word to act as harpooner for the first mate, and it would not, therefore, be right for me to do otherwise."

Marian sighed, but said no more. Somehow she was unable to sleep that night.

Next morning the cry of "There blows!" proclaimed that whales were sighted.

In a moment all was hurry and excitement aboard. A school of bowhead whales were seen about three miles off.

"Call all hands! Clear away the boats!" screamed the captain.

Marian had come on deck. Pale as a lilly she stood, watching the boats as they descended, splashing into the water.

"Lookout for yourself," she said, in a low tone to Wren, as he went past her to get into the larboard boat.

The young man merely smiled. The next moment the boats were putting away from the ship, which lay with her main yard hauled aback, as is usual in such cases.

The boats pulled until they were out of sight of the vessel, which by this time, the wind having died away, was becalmed. Hours passed, and still no sign of them was seen.

Marian was pale with anxiety. Even the captain, who on this occasion had not lowered, walked his quarter-deck uneasily.

"What can have become of them," said Marian, walking over to the captain and laying a hand on his arm.

"I don't know, it really does look strange."

Another hour passed. Still no sign of the boats.

The sun was now low in the horizon, evening was throwing long-pointed shadows upon the sea from the numerous bergs floating past the vessel. Upon some of these bergs the shining seal crawling would lift its unearthly eyes to Marian's face, as if in sympathy with her feelings.

Tears were now gathering in her brown orbs. Her bosom heaved, and she could scarcely repress her sobs.

"Heaven help him wherever he may be," she muttered.

Time passed; gloomy shadows gathered; the stars came out—the moon rose—a cold, clear night!

Still the captain paced his quarter-deck with sharp look-outs posted all over the vessel, and still poor Marian, stifling her sobs, leaned over the quarter-rail. Suddenly she fancied she saw a black speck upon the water through a vista among the icebergs.

She notified the captain, who soon had his night-glass leveled.

He dropped the glass and turned pale.

"For heaven's sake!" gasped Marian, "what do you see?"

"A boat with one man in it!"

"Only one?"

"Ay, ay, niece, that is all!"

The ship was headed for the boat, which soon came along side.

Mr. Barkton, cold and shivering, his garb covered with icicles, stepped aboard.

"Well?" said the captain, impatiently.

"For Heaven's sake, a little rum first," said Barkton, turning pale, and shunning Marian's gaze.

The captain having called to the steward to furnish the rum the mate was soon gratified.

"Well," he said, after drinking deep draughts of the hot liuqor, "we pulled after them whales, do you see, but they led us on a sort of a wild goose chase until near night, when the second mate got fast, and all the other boats followed him and I was the only one left to follow the other whales. If those fellows haven't come aboard yet I suppose it is because they are waiting for the turn of the current to tow the whale to the ship."

The captain's eyes brightened.

"That isn't so bad, Mr. Barkton, upon my word," said the skipper, joyfully rubbing his hands.

The mate showed no joy. His whole face was pinched and wrinkled, as if with some troublesome thought, and he kept pouring the rum down his throat.

"For Heaven's sake, stop," said the captain, "or you will be as drunk as a fiddler."

He pulled the bottle from the mate's hand.

"You are afraid of your liquor. You begrudge it!" screamed the mate. "I must have more."

"Let that be my answer," cried the captain, throwing the bottle overboard. "But what ails you, man? You look pale, and how you tremble."

"Where is he? Where is William Wren?" asked Marian, her eyes burning on the mate like coals of fire.

"Ay, and all the rest of your crew?" chimed in the captain.

"I will tell you," said the mate, knitting his brows yet more closely. "You see we got fast at dark to a whale. Our boat was dragged along through the ice. Suddenly it went over so far that all the men in it except myself and the youth, Tom Cuttle, who pulled the bow oar, were spilled out upon the ice.

"As I was anxious to secure the whale, I did not cut, hoping to kill it when it should come up, with the help of Tom Cuttle.

"Well, I had to cut from it, after all, when I was many miles from the place where the men had been spilled out."

"So you couldn't tell where they are?"

"No; but I dare say they are all safe. I forgot to mention that Tom Cuttle was caught by the line and dragged under while I was endeavoring to get at that whale."

"A strange thing to forget," thought the captain.

Moreover, he did not like the mate's manner, which was singularly unnatural.

As to Marian, she felt uneasy. A strange foreboding seemed to tell of evil—to whisper to her heart that Barkton had not told the whole truth.

All that night the captain, now having a good breeze, cruised hither and thither for that portion of the crew whom the mate had stated were left on the ice. Next morning, the other boats with the whale, came alongside. The missing men, however, could not be found.

All that day and the next the captain vainly searched for them.

Marian was almost distracted. In the afternoon of the second day all aboard beheld a horrible sight. A huge, wounded whale came up close to the ship, having a living body pinned, apparently with a harpoon. The creature sounded ere the spectators could obtain a distinct view of the apparition, but Marian, with a wild shriek, exclaimed that she believed it was the body of William Wren they had seen.

"Heaven forbid!" groaned the captain; "and yet me thought it did look like him!"

Others of the crew thought so too.

Meanwhile all had noticed the aggitation of Barhton at sight of that whale with the dead body attached. The mate had turned livid, while he shook like an aspen.

The same pinched, wrinkled expression the captain had previously noticed seemed to come again, and remain upon his parchment-hued face.

An hour after the whale had disappeared, the man aloft reported some persons on an iceberg to leeward.

Instantly there was a great commotion throughout the ship.

The vessel was headed for the berg, and the men picked up were found to be all those missing except William Wren.

Half frozen and starved, it was sometime before they were fit to be questioned.

They then corroborated the mate's story about the boat being capsized, and their being spilled out.

"Was William Wren among you?" inquired the captain.

They could not say—it was so dark at the time—but they thought not, or they would have seen him, unless indeed his body went down between the berges, when he fell out of the boat and got under.

The captain was soarly puzzled.

Stronger than ever became his conviction that the man pinned to the whale was Wren, and that it was Barkton who had performed the horrible deed.

Days and weeks passed and still there was no further news of the missing fourth mate.

One morning up came that whale again, right ahead of the ship, with the body pinned to it.

The harpoon had gone right through the form, and fastened to the whale, showing that the situation of the corps could not be the mere result of accident.

The clothing had now all become torn from the body, while the disfigured face was unrecognizable.

All hands, however, believed it to be William Wren, and again many stern glances were directed at the mate, who, as before, showed singular agitation.

His whole frame trembled, and he seemed transfixed to the deck, as his eyes, apparently by some strange fascination, were turned upon the body.

Before a boat could be lowered down went the whale, and was next seen far to windward, where it would be impossible to capture him.

Poor Marian was nearly distracted. Her excitement threw her into a brain-fever, from which she would never, probably, have recovered but for a most unexpected circumstance—the reappearance of William Wren; alive and well.

Coming aboard from another whale ship the captain had spoken, he stated that his vessel had picked him up, after he had remained on the ice for two days. On being spilled out of the boat, he had gone down beneath the ice, but, by swimming rapidly some distance under water, he had saved himself, clutching another berg when he arose to the surface.

The darkness had prevented his seeing his shipmates, whom he did not know had been also spilled out. The berg drifted with the current, and a mist, the next morning, still kept his shipmates out of sight.

Half famished and frozen, he finally sighted and signalled the vessel which had picked him up.

The men now wondered whose body it was they had seen fastened to the whale.

Barkton had said he knew nothing about it, and all hands were now inclined to believe him.

Finally, for a third time the ghastly object was seen, and a boat being now lowered, the whale was captured. The mate had refused to go down, saying that no good would come of hunting a whale with a dead man attached.

This had been charged to his superstitious notions; but when the whale was captured, and the harpoon dislodged from the body, the mate's name was found upon the weapon, and on the body a ring which was recognized as the property of Tom Cuttle.

Cuttle had been frightened—when the whale came up, and while the mate was trying to kill it—to a degree which had caused him to disobey orders. This so enraged Barkton that he flung a harpoon at the youth, who, seeing it aimed at him fell upon the whale. The harpoon struck him while he was in this position, passing through his body and pinning him to the leviathan.

We have to add that Barkton was hung for his crime. Marian and her husband now live happily in a little stone cottage near Sag Harbor. Years have passed since the events recorded, but the husband and wife often think, with a shudder, of that terrible spectacle of the harpooned body fast to a whale.

Reading for the Million.

Soft Pillow.

Whitefield and a pious companion were much annoyed one night at a public house by a set of gamblers in the room adjoining where they slept. Their noisy clamor and horrid blasphemy so excited Whitefield's abhorrence and pious sympathy that he could not rest.

"I will go to them and reprove their wickedness," he said. His companion remonstrated in vain. He went. His words of reproof fell apparently harmless upon them. Returning, he laid down to sleep. His companion asked him rather sharply:

"What did you gain by it?"

"A soft pillow," he said patiently and soon fell asleep.

Yes a soft pillow is the reward of fidelity, the companion of clear conscience.

It is a sufficient remuneration for doing right in the absence of all other rewards. And none know more truly the value of a soft pillow than those parents whose anxiety for wayward children is enchanced by a consciousness of neglect. Those who faithfully rebuke and properly restrain them by their christian deportment and religious counsels can sleep quietly in the day of trial.

Parents, do your duty now, in the fear of God, and when old age comes on, you may lie down on a soft pillow. "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

A Farmer's Mistake.

When "boarding round" was the fashion with school teachers, Farmer A., on coming to the schoolma'am. In a moment he perceived a strong odor of musk which came from the schoolma'am's clothing. He, entirely ignorant of the cause, charged it upon Ponto, who had a strong propensity for musk rats, and at once reprimanded him.

"Ponto, you scamp, you have been killing musk rats; go out of doors, sir, and get sweetened off."

But Ponto did not stir, and Farmer A. spoke again more sharply:

"Get out; you'll scent the whole house."

The schoolma'am, by this time, was blushing red as crimson, while the boys and girls could scarcely keep from bursting into laughter. One of them, unnoticed, at last made their father understand how the matter stood, and he, of course, dropped the subject. The evening passed away rather awkwardly with all, and the teacher failed to return the next day. On her account the affair was kept quiet until after she left the neighborhood, when many were the hearty laughs had over Farmer A's. error and the schoolma'am's discomfiture. She omitted musk thereafter.

What an Old Man has Noticed.

I have noticed that all men are honest when well watched.

I have noticed that purses will hold pennies as well as pounds.

I have noticed that in nearly all things money is the main object in view.

I have noticed that in order to be a reasonable creature it is necessary at times to be downright mad.

I have noticed that some men are so honest that necessity compels them to be dishonest in the end.

I have noticed that whatever is, is right, with the exceptions—the left eye, the left leg, and the left side of a plum pudding.

I have noticed that the prayer of every selfish man is "Forgive us our debts," while he makes everybody who owes him pay to the utmost farthing.

I have noticed that he who thinks every man a rogue is very certain to see one when he shaves himself, and he ought, in mercy to his neighbor, to surrender the rascal to justice.

I have noticed that money is the fool's wisdom, the knave's reputation, the poor man's desire, the covetous man's ambition, and the idol of all.

Have You Enemies?

Go straight ahead and don't mind them. If they get in your way walk around regardless of their spite. A man who has no enemies is seldom good for anything. He is made out of that kind of material which is so easily worked that every body has a hand in it. A sterling character is one who thinks for himself and speaks what he thinks. He is always sure of having enemies. They are as necessary to him as fresh air—they keep him alive and active. A celebrated character who was surrounded with enemies used to remark, "they are sparks which, if you don't blow, will go out of themselves." "Live down prejudice," was one of the Iron Duke's mottoes.

Let this be your feelings while endeavoring to live down the scandal of those who are bitter against you; do as they desire, and open the way to more abuse.

Let the poor fellow talk—there will be a reaction if you but perform your duty, and hundreds who were once alienated from you will flock to you and acknowledge their error.

IN old times an essential part of a bride's outfit was sand for scouring her kitchen implements. Now-a-days they don't trouble themselves about the sand; all that is required from the father is that he shall "down with the dust."

AN Illinois woman and her husband have had a passage-at-arms. She used buckshot, he stove wood. The coroner decided that the superiority lay with the former.

Jay Cook at Home.

Nine miles back of Philadelphia, on the waters of Tacony Creek—writes a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune—is "Ogontz," the residence of Jay Cooke. It is a villa of the native syenite of the hills, pointed and set in blue mortar, with iron verandas, Mansard towers and pavilions, and all the elegances afforded by modern resources and improvements. A flower-walk with beds and terraces, closed by a mock ruin, in which fireworks were set off on national holidays, is the vista from that side of the house, where, in a great recess with painted walls, the conservatory is maintained. From the opposite veranda there is a view of grass-beds, sprinkled with pools and fountains, sloping down to the creek, which is made to descend in cascades; and here the mausoleum of the family—a beautiful edifice in marble—makes the headland to a cape of timber. The lands attached to this noble mansion reach about two hundred acres in extent, and are covered to a great degree with natural woods, chiefly oak, chestnut, sycamore, and hickory. The hills in all that region are high, and the country stony, like the native people, who belong to a hard time type of Quakers and Welsh, Scotch, and old German aboriginals. About one mile from Ogontz is a small turnpike village called "New York Road Station," or Shoemaker Town, where Mr. Cooke had builded his church—a quaint and attractive specimen of early English Gothic From this village Mr. Cooke went daily to the city by train. Sunday excepted; and, if he ever remained at home, through indisposition or satiety, he communicated with his banking-house by telegraph. Two small black Vermont ponies were his own favorite roadsters. He was a good neighbor—the best ever known in these parts—and plain and cordial in his address. At home he lived a parental life, being a widower and fond of his grandchildren. He spent little upon himself, but was proud of his residence; and it has been believed in that region for a good while past that he had presented Ogontz to his daughter, Mrs. Bonney. The portraits in his house most notable to see were Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Chase in oil and marble, E. W. Clarke, Phil Sheridan, and his own father, Elenthews Cooke, who had been re-interred in his family vault. One of the last of his purchases was a small album of Moran's views on the Yellowstone, for which he gave $1,000. He had a large library, which he had no time to read, and, as the employer of many servants, he was kind to all, but not profligate in wages. His dwelling and grounds would have brought, one year ago, $2,000 an acre, although he spent that aggregate amount on the house alone. His expenses at his dwelling could not have been less than $1,000 a week as long as he entertained commensurate with his house and business. Near at hand, in a quiet cottage, lived his agent, General Nettleton, of Sandusky, the active man at advertising and selling the bonds. Cooke had a private secretary and phonographer, about fourteen servants at the villa, about two hundred employees in his three banking houses, and a vast pay-roll in his railroad and insurance companies. He is believed to have been worth $7,000,000 when at his highest.

The Value of a Newspaper.

The following is the experience of a mechanic concerning the benefits of a newspaper:

Ten years ago I lived in a town in Indiana. On returning home one night, for I am a carpenter by trade, I saw a little girl leave my door, and I asked my wife who she was. She said Mrs. Harris had sent her after their newspaper, which my wife had borrowed. As we sat down to tea my wife said to me by name:

"I wish you would subscribe for the newspaper; it is so much comfort to me when you are away from home."

"I would like to do so," said I, "but you know I owe a payment on the house and lot. It will be all that I can do to meet it."

She replied. "If you take this paper, I will sew for the tailor to pay for it."

I subscribed for the paper; it came in due time to the shop. While resting one noon and looking over it, I saw an advertisement of the county commissioners to let a bridge that was to be built. I put in a bid for the bridge, and the job was awarded to me, on which I cleared $300, which enabled me to pay for my house and lot easily, and the newspaper. If I had not subscribed for the newspaper I would not have known anything about the contract, and could not have met payment on the house and lot. A mechanic never loses anything by taking a newspaper.—Advertiser Gazette.

Our Words.

It is often said of an ignorant man that his vocabulary is very limited. Most of us can think of persons who seem to employ in conversation not more than two or three hundred words. Some curious facts about the English language may interest our readers. The exact number of words in the language we do not know; probably no one knows, because its bounds are not fixed, and when one wants a word, often he makes it. The number is generally understood; however, to be about forty thousand. But the words in common literary use number about ten thousand, those employed in conversation hardly reach half that number. We cannot state the exact proportion of words of foreign origin in the language, but the Latin has been by far the largest contributor. The components of the language may be approximately indicated by the following figures: Latin, 6,700; French, 4,800; Saxons, 1,600; Greek, 1,200; Dutch, 700; Italian, 200. Several other European and one or two Oriental languages are small contributors. In view of these facts—of the marked preponderance of the Latin element in our language—the question of studying or neglecting the classics would seem to admit of no argument.

What Makes a Man.

What is it that makes a man? Can you tell? We can tell you what does not. Good clothes do not; a handsome face does not; learning does not. You must have something else to make a man. We have seen a very good description of a man, which reads thus:

A beautiful soul, a loving mind,
Full of affection for its kind;
A helper of the human race;
A soul of beauty and of grace,
That truly speaks of God within,
And never makes a league with sin.

This is the kind of a man worth something in the world. We want a great many more such men than we now have. Will you not strive to be such a man.

A Touching Story.

Many years ago—long anterior to the war—Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, then a leading member of Congress, was invited to address a meeting at Alexandria, for the benefit of an orphan asylum and free schools in that ancient borough. In the course of his address Mr. Stephens related the following anecdote:

"A poor little boy, on a cold night, with no home or roof to shelter his head, no paternal or maternal guardian or guide, to protect or direct him on his way, reached at nightfall the home of a wealthy planter, who took him in, fed and lodged him, and sent him on his way with a blessing.—These kind attentions, cheered his heart and inspired him with fresh courage to battle with the obstacles of life. Years rolled on. Providence led him on, and he reached the legal profession. His kind host had died, and the cormorants that prey on the substance of man had formed a conspiracy to get from the widow her estates. She sent for the nearest counsel to commit her cause to him, and that counsel proved to be the orphan boy, long before welcomed and entertained by her deceased husband. The stimulus of a warm, tenacious gratitude was now added to the ordinary motive connected with the profession. He undertook her case with a will not to be resisted; he gained it; the widow's estate was secured to her in perpetuity; and," Mr. Stephens added, with an emphasis of emotion that sent an electric thrill throughout the house, "that orphan boy stands before you!"

Sayings of Spurgeon.

Spurgeon sententiously expresses a number of thoughts "worthy remembering" in the following appropriate sentences, which he publishes as "advice gratis:"

Nobody is more like an houest man than a thorough rogue.

When you see a man with a great deal of religion displayed in his shop window, you may depend upon it he keeps a very small stock of it within.

Do not choose your friend by his looks; handsome shoes often pinch the feet

Do not be fond of compliments; remember "thank you, pussy, and thank you pussy," killed the cat.

Don't believe the man who talks the most, for mewing cats are very seldom good mousers.

By no means put yourself in another person's power; if you put your thumb between two grinders theyare very apt to bite.

Drink nothing with out seeing it; sign nothing without reading it; and make sure that it means no more than it says.

Don't go to law unless you have nothing to lose; lawyer's houses are built on fool's heads.

Put no dependence on the label of a bag, and count money after your own kind.

In any business, never wade into water where you cannot see the bottom.

See the sack open before you buy what is in it, for he who trades in the dark asks to be cheated.

Vulgarity.

Don't brawl, girls. Don't guffaw and shout upon the streets, like excited plantation mammas. Don't use slang phrases, giving your assent to a proposition, with a "you bet," or "that's so." It dosen't sound well from the lips of those whom we class with the gentle things of this world. You cannot imagine how badly those things sound, coming from those who should utter only pleasant words, and kind phrases. Avoid all coarseness and vulgarity. No young woman can afford to be vulgar. Vulgarity, destroys all beauty. Your eyes may be bright; your teeth like pearls; and your lips coral; but coarse utterances will mar all these, and shock the senses of those who hear them. Be not familiar, to cheapness. The sweetest flower is that which grows surrounded with thorns; access to which is difficult, and laborious. That which is easily won, is not valued, and soon falls discarded from the hands of those who bear it away. Value yourselves as you would be valued, and you can make no mistake as to the result. Then again we say, Girls, don't brawl. Don't be vulgar. Don't use coarse speech. Do not spoil and deface, by such practices, the beauty vouchsafed to you by a kind Providence, for a good end.

Where He Was Going.

A celebrated preacher who had been holding a series of revival meetings in a town on the canal, while walking along the towpath one day came across a boatman who was swearing furiously. Marching up, he confronted him and abruptly asked:

"Sir, do you know where you are going?"

The unsuspecting man innocently replied that he was going up the canal on the boat Johnny Sands.

"No sir, your are not," continued the preacher; "you are going to hell faster than a canal boat will convey you."

The boatman looked at him in astonishment for a minute, and then returned the question.

"Sir, do you know where you are going?"

"I expect to go to heaven."

"No sir, you are going into the canal!"

And suiting the action to the word, he took the minister in his arms and tossed him into the muddy waters, where he would have drowned had not the boatman relented and fished him out.

Profanity.

We are living emphatically in the age of profanity, and it seems to us that we are on the topmost current. One cannot go through the streets anywhere without having his ears offended with the vilest of words, and his reverence shocked by most profane use of sacred names. Nor does it come from the old or middle-aged alone, for it is a fact as alarming as true, that the younger portion of the community are the most proficient in the degrading language. Boys have an idea that it is smart to swear, that it makes them manly, there never was a greater mistake in the world. Men, even those who swear themselves, are disgusted with profanity in a young man, because they know how, of all bad habits, this clings the most closely and increases with years. It is the most insidious of habits, growing on one so invisibly that almost before he was aware he becomes an accomplished curser.

"VEGETABLE PILLS!" exclaimed an old lady; "don't talk to me of such stuff! The best vegetable pill ever made is an apple dumpling. For destroying a gnawing in the stomach, there is nothing like it. It always can be relied on."

IN THE LIGHT OF THE RESULT.

Common decency would now suggest that the men who have been disturbing the peace, and betraying the candidates of the Republican party, should no longer obtrude themselves among those whom they have both traduced and betrayed. While they wore the mask of Republicanism they did succeed in deceiving honest men, and sometimes, for a consideration, by the votes thus fraudulently obtained, elected Democratic candidates. But this could not always be kept concealed, and when they themselves sought the issue before the people, they were so effectually rebuked, that, finding the old game of deceit no longer practicable, they flew to the last desperate remedy of a revolt, and joined their standard to that of the common enemy.

No Leaguer who took sides with the bolters in this campaign should have the hardihood to ask recognition as a Republican, and if such audacity should be found in any of them, true Republicans should have the manliness to unceremoniously kick them out. The League is an organization by itself. It was founded in duplicity, has practiced treachery, and debauched the political morals of every man who has entered and adhered to it. Its leaders and adherents appeared in their self-constituted convention, they put up candidates, and named a county committee. Let the name of every man appearing in either of these places be kept for future reference, and where there has been no disavowal of his connection or sympathy with the movement, he should at least be put upon probation before he is considered as any thing else than a spy among Republicans in council.

☞ The Republic, for October, is an excellent number. It is the only political magazine published, and should be well patronized. Its contents are: The Diffusion of Political Knowledge the Foundation of Good Government; The Massachusetts Convention; the Financial Outlook; Financial Disasters; Hon. Nelson Dingley, jr., Governor elect of Maine; Governor Noyes' Opening Speech; Serious Charges Against the Canadian Ministry; The Cheap Transport Question—No. II; The National Educational Convention; Congressional Subsidies; The Great Educator; &c., &c. Terms, $2 per annum. Address The Republic Publishing Company, Washington, D. C.

☞ The active Republicans who failed to stand by the party, during the last canvass, are assured that it will take several years of the most steadfast and unexceptional probation to put them in a position to receive any favors at the hands of the party. The day for permitting treacherous sneaks to occupy front seats in the sanctuary, or, in other words, to fill fat offices, is past.—In the future the offices of Huntingdon county will be given to those who merit them by consistent and faithful support of the party.

☞ We hope the members of the press, who could not comprehend the political situation in Huntingdon county, will now be gentlemen enough to do us justice, and to say that the Republican party here has divested itself of the factional element, and that the JOURNAL represents the party.—We think we are entitled to this recognition for services performed in the light of the result.

☞ We learn that several reputed Republican Postmasters, in this county, made themselves conspicuous, on election day, by handing out and voting the Potato Bug ticket. Some good Republicans or open Democrats should take their place. There is no excuse for a Republican officeholder, working to defeat his party. No honorable Republican would hold an office at the hands of his party and labor for its defeat.

☞ Senator Scott has had a severe fight in Huntingdon, with a faction made up of men who care very little for Republican principles, and now that he has so overwhelmingly crushed his personal opponents, and the great majority of the party there has sustained him, we trust this fight will end. Henceforth we want harmony in the Republican ranks all over the State.—State Journal.

☞ When the brute, Wirz, was about to be led to execution, we remember him saying something like unto this:

"With the contest and its results, we desire to bury all the animosities which were engendered by it. We did the best we could for our friends, and did it honestly, and if in any respect we have erred we are sorry for it."

☞ The fellow who has been carrying water on both shoulders, for several years, expecting to get a nomination for some lucrative position, has quit it since the election. He is satisfied that there is nothing in the League movement.

☞ The Democrats and the Leaguers have been eating a small turkey, at different tables, and contrary to the usual course of things the Leaguers got the neck. They make wry faces. It is a little tough, no doubt!

☞ The fellows who have been roosting on the fence, not knowing on which side to get down, lest they might put their foot in it, are now crowing lustily over the defeat of the Leaguers.

☞ Trough Creek Valley appears to be the best locality in the county, for Potato Bugs to thrive in. Why is this thus?

THE RESULT IN HUNTINGDON COUNTY.

In another portion of our paper we present the official vote of this county, polled on Tuesday, of last week. While the result is not entirely what we expected, yet we feel that there is great cause for gratification. The fight was almost entirely made upon the candidate for Assembly. The Bolters would never have held a Convention, or put a ticket into the field, if they had for one moment dreamed of their inability to defeat him. Woods has always been vain enough to believe that he controlled a majority of the Republican party of Huntingdon county, and it was this vanity that has brought about his rout and confusion. He believed that he could vote at least fifteen hundred or sixteen hundred Republican votes, and with this number voting for Dunn, he felt confident that he could elect McAteer. If he had not felt thus confident he would have voted every man in his clique, that he could have controlled, directly for him. However, we suppose that the constant cry of the Republicans that he intended to do this, deterred him to a great extent, and this may have saved our candidate, because if they had polled all their votes directly for McAteer they could have made a gap that could not have been filled up. Of course this could only have been brought about by the entire body of 600 votes, the number which the Leaguers controlled, going over to the Democrats. They could not, however, have taken them over in a body. This was fully demonstrated last fall when Woods made every effort to get his followers to vote the Mule ticket. By a close examination of the returns of that election, it will be seen that he could only induce about 240 to do this, and this is the full extent of his ability in this direction, and this could only be done when the Democrats were voting for almost the entire League ticket. A partisan may follow a bad leader to the brink of destruction, but when the leader sinks into the chasm and takes up the shout of the enemy, he recoils and gravitates to his first love. This is universal experience, and the Bolters would not have proven an exception to the rule. Guss and Woods miscalculated their strength, and the result is that they are beaten out of all countenance. True the Democrats have elected Covert, Horning, Cresswell and M'Nite, the small end of the ticket, but this is no consolation to Guss and Woods and their League. They had offered to fuse before and their offers were spurned. It only shows their deluded followers whom they induced to vote for their ticket because they claimed it to be the regular ticket, and that they had votes enough to elect it, that they only control about 600 votes, exclusive of the Temperance vote, out of a full Republican vote of 3,000. Just one-fifth! Not enough to effect the result at any important election, unless they were in a body to join the Democrats, and such a fusion would drive an equal number of Democrats to the Republicans, and this, as we demonstrated before, would be out of the question. They are left utterly powerless for evil, and the only course left for them—Guss, Woods and the League—is to go over to the Democrats or stand upon their good behavior until the Republican party feels like taking them into full fellowship again. One or the other they must do, and we do not care a straw which.

We have every sympathy for the good and true Republicans who have been deceived and deluded by this cabal, and we assure them that when we refer to the League we do not refer to them. We know there are several hundred of this class, and we know too that they now feel sorry that they left themselves be deceived. We would advise them to shake off their bad associates and come up to the support of the party straight in the future.

The Democrats who are elected are excellent men, and while we are sorry that Messrs. McCarthy, Lee, Davis and Laporte are defeated, we are gratified that their successful rivals are sound men, who have the confidence of the community, and as long as they conduct themselves properly we will sustain them to the best of our ability.

☞ The Huntingdon Journal is having a lawsuit with A. W. Kenyon, treasurer of Huntingdon county, who refuses to pay a bill of $20 for service rendered during the campaign which resulted in Kenyon's election to an office which pays him $2,000 per annum. Our sympathies are all with the Journal. Politicians must be taught that fidelity to party don't require any editor to expend his time, money and brains for any man or set of men gratuitously.—Hollidaysburg Standard.

That's so. And no man with the soul of a flea would expect an editor to deny the various charges that are brought against him as a candidate and to keep him before the public, to enable him to realize both honors and profits, without paying for the services.—Huntingdon Journal.

The sentiments expressed above by two of our contemporaries are undoubtedly correct. An editor who professes to publish a political organ is bound to support in the main the principles of his party, as they are from time to time enunciated by the National and State Conventions, and at the same time give a general support to the candidates who represent them. But, when an editor devotes especial space, time, and labor to defending or presenting the particular merits and claims of an individual candidate, then for that extra labor he is entitled to compensation, just as the lawyer is, who devotes especial labor to the interests of his client.—Lewistown True Democrat.

☞ It has been currently reported that G. M. Green had prepared himself, previous to the election, to move to Huntingdon to take charge of the Treasurer's office. It may be a libel, however.

☞ The Leaguers have now ascertained their strength in this county. We hope they are satisfied. We know a good many of those whom they deceived who are not.

☞ The chap who has always believed that if he would stick to Woods he would get an office, has concluded that the League don't amount to much.

☞ We will try and give the official vote of the State next week.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, October 14.—The following proclamation was issued to-day:

WASHINGTON, October 14.—By the President of the United States of America—A proclamation: The approaching close of another year brings with it the occasion for renewed thanksgiving and acknowledgement to the Almighty Ruler of the Universe for the unnumbered mercies which He has bestowed upon us. Abundant harvests have been among the rewards of industry. With local exceptions health has been among the blessings enjoyed. Tranquility at home and peace with other nations have prevailed. Frugal industry is regaining its merited recognition and its merited rewards. Gradually, but under the Providence of God surely, as we trust, the nation is recovering from the lingering results of a dreadful civil strife. For these and all the other mercies vouchsafed, it becomes us as a people to return our heartfelt and grateful acknowledgements, and with our thanksgiving we may unite our prayers for the cessation of local and temporary suffering.

I therefore recommend that on Thursday, the 27th day of November next, the people meet in their respective places of worship to make their acknowledgements to Almighty God for His bounty and His protection, and to offer up prayers for their continuance.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington this 14th day of October, in the year of our Lord, 1873, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

The cry of fire, on Thursday evening, brought the entire fire department out, with the "Juniata" in the lead. The fire did not amount to much, and was caused by a defective stove-pipe, in a house in the neighborhood of Second and Mifflin. Tally one for the "Juniatas."

We were under the impression that every reader of the Journal knew that we do not publish anonymous communications, but we have been mistaken. There are several who do not know this important fact and the result is their communications have found the way to the waste basket.

It is said that for a very small consideration the borough can secure the right to use the water of the Huntingdon dam, for a water supply of the town, and that a turbine wheel can be put in that will throw up water enough to supply New York. This is something practical. Don't leave the opportunity pass.

John Logan feels better on the result of the election than any other man in the county. There is no doubt a good reason for it. He knows that the Stewardship pays some way or other. Will Horning allow him to remain longer against the wishes of four-fifths of the taxpayers of the county. He is said to be an honest man? We will see.

Two stables were burned, in Alexandria, on Tuesday night of last week, about the time the election polls were closed which caused great excitement. The fire department of the place turned out and labored vigorously, but it was a bad fire to make much headway against. We have not heard the names of the proprietors nor the amount of the loss.

THE TRIAL OF STEAM FIRE ENGINES AT HUNTINGDON—The Vigilant Successful.—The fair of the Huntingdon County Agricultural Society closed on Friday last with a larger attendance than on any day previous. This was without doubt caused by the announcement that a trial of the capacities of three steam fire engines would take place on that day, embracing the "Huntingdon," of Huntingdon; the "Phœnix," of Hollidaysburg; and the "Vigilant," of this city. At an early hour of the eventful day, the Phœnix, accompanied by the Allegheny Hook and Ladder, of Hollidaysburg, numbering in the aggregate about two hundred, passed this point on their way to the scene of action. Both companies are composed of splendid looking men, neatly and tastily equipped. Hollidaysburg's crack band, "Silver Cornet," were with them, and made excellent music.

Shortly afterward the Excelsior Hose Company, which by the way is the junior fire organization of our city, followed, taking with them their neat and trim hose carriage, looking as bright as a twenty dollar gold piece.—The company was marshaled by Billy McDonald, in which capacity he gave perfect satisfaction as he does in everything he undertakes.

On the next train went down Vigilant No. 2, numbering some fifty members, and with countenances which told plainly that if it was in steam and water they were going to take the prize.

Reaching Huntingdon, and after tarrying some time on the fair ground, the procession was formed, being preceded by the Huntingdon band, which by the way is one of the best bands we have heard in a long time.

The procession consisted of six companies of firemen, viz: the "Huntingdon" and "Juniata," of Huntingdon; the "Phœnix" and "Allegheny," of Hollidaysburg; and the "Excelsior" and "Vigilant," of Altoona. Besides there were a large number of citizens in carriages. Without exception it was one of the finest parades we have ever witnessed with the same number of companies. The ladies of Huntingdon, on the route of march showed their appreciation to the "fire laddies" by tendering of the fully arranged and beautiful bouquets to members of the different companies as they passed.

Just here we will state that if Huntingdon has not just as harmonious politicians as other places, she is blessed with the prettiest and loveliest lot of ladies of any town in the State of its size.

The parade having ended in the fair grounds and orders being given to break ranks, the visiting companies were generously invited to partake of a substantial dinner by the Huntingdon Fire Company. The meal was enjoyed with due zest, after which the arrangements for the trial were begun. The Phœnix was the first to take the place assigned the steamers for the trial. The time allotted to each engine was one half hour. The judges were Al. Tyhurst, of Huntingdon; C. H. Porter, of Hollidaysburg; and W. H. Adams, of Altoona.

The result of the throwing of water was as follows:

Phœnix, 219¾; Huntingdon, 231; Vigilant, 257.

The two first named engines used up the full time allotted them, while the Vigilant had twelve minutes yet of her time when the judges declared the "green shirted Irishmen" winners. The Vigilant then filled the suction box of the Juniata hand engine, of Huntingdon, with water, which gave an opportunity for the shavers to show their prowess. The Juniata consists of boys from the ages of twelve to fifteen years, and they were mightily pleased with what they considered the kindness of the Vigilant, which they appreciated by giving vent to cheers only such as youngsters of their age can make.

After the contest had been decided, congratulations to the winning company were the order of the day, both the losing companies trying to see which could outdo the other.

No serious disorder occurred during the stay in Huntingdon, but we are sorry to state that on returning in the evening, some over-excited Phœnix boys showed a bad disposition toward those of the "Vigies" who were returning in the same train, and who were in charge of banners, flags, etc., belonging to the last named company. We are far from saying that the Phœnix, as a company, participated in the disgraceful proceedings, and think it was merely some who had taken in too much "stonefence."

This trial now makes the Vigilant the best on record in Pennsylvania outside of the two large cities. That she earned it honestly and fairly no one will deny. It was by having everything about her machinery in perfect order that she gained her point. Mr. Samuel Black, her engineer, assisted by Mr. Adam Moss, of the Good Will, of this city, deserves credit and praise for their excellent management of the apparatus.

* * * * * * *

In winding up this article we cannot but pay a tribute to the people of Huntingdon.—They seemed to vie with each other in their efforts to please all visitors. P. M. Lytle, esq., chief marshal for the occasion, and his able assistants from Hollidaysburg and this place, deserve credit also, for their untiring zeal in making the affair a success. May they live long and die happy.

The balance of the different companies returned home on the western bound trains during the evening and night. Some on the mail, others on fast line, while many waited till they got mixed. However, not a single man was lost.—Altoona Sun, 17th inst.

LITERARY NOTICES.—Wild Thoughts in Rhyme.—We have received this little volume of poems from the press of Smythe & Co., of Columbus, Ohio, by Arnold Ister, through the courtesy of our late carrier, Lawrence H. Cott. We have read many of those rhymes with much pleasure. There is a freshness and raciness of style that gives them a peculiar charm. The writer possesses a fluency of thought and utterance that is rarely met. It is a very neat little volume of 120 pages, printed on tinted paper and sold at one dollar.

The November number of Harper's Magazine closes a semi-annual volume of remarkable excellence, whether we regard its reading matter or its illustrations. The current Number contains two such articles. The first is an exceedingly valuable contribution by Helen S. Conant, entitled "The Secret of the Strait," made up from the unpublished report of the late Dr. G. A. Maack, the geologist of the Darien Exploring Expedition of 1871. The second is a contribution of S. S. Conant, entitled "The Last of the Three," appropos of the recent publication of the "Memoirs and Letters of Sara Coleridge." Besides separate articles containing the substance of the most important of recent publications, there are always running in Harper the most notable literary productions of the day during their progress and previous to their final publication in book-form. These comprise not only serial stories from such writers as Wilkie Collins, Charles Reade, Prof. DeMille, Anthony Trollope, Miss Thackeray, and Miss Mullock; but also serials of an entirely different character, such as Emilio Castelar's "Republican Movement in Europe," Moncure D. Conway's "South Coast Saunterings in England," C. Nordhoff's brilliant and comprehensive papers on the Pacific Coast, the "Recollections of an old Stager," and "Our London Scrap Book."

While these permanent features—maintained at an enormous cost which its immense and constantly increasing circulation alone could justify—Harper's Magazine stands confessedly unrivaled and beyond the reach of rivalry, it is not less happily successful in those ever-varying attractions which give to each recurring Number the charm of freshness and novelty. In securing this result the work of the Editor is effectually supplemented by the best artists of the day, such as Charles Parsons, W. L. Shepard, C. S. Reinhart, Grenville Perkins, Sol. Eytinge, Paul Franzeny, Theo. R. Davis and Fortier Conklin. The average cost of engravings for each monthly issue is not less than twenty-five hundred dollars.

The current Number for November contains seven illustrated articles (exclusive of the Illustrated Serial Story, "The Living Link," by Prof. DeMille,) with sixty-six engravings. Besides "The Secret of the Strait," and "The Last of the three," already alluded to, with portraits, by Junius Henri Browne; and installments of Porte Crayon's "Mountains."

Short stories are contributed by Ruth Dana and Anna Warner, author of "Dollars and Cents," etc. The poetry of the Number is by January Searle, Rose Terry, Paul H. Hayne and Alfred H. Louis.

Mr. Curtis resumes the Easy Chair in this Number. His description of Arcadia as discovered in the Tyrol, is in his best vein.

In an early number will be commenced "My Mother and I," a Love Story for Girls (beautifully illustrated), by the Author of "John Halifax, Gentleman."

BARN BURNT—THE FIRE THE WORK of an Incendiary.—The barn of Mr. Andrew Decker, in Henderson township, about two miles and a half from this borough, was totally destroyed by fire, about 4 o'clock, a. m., on Saturday last. The barn contained all his grain, hay, and farming tools, all of which were lost. The fire was evidently the work of an incendiary, as the fiend was tracked to and from the premises. Mr. Decker estimates his loss at about $2500; no insurance.

In An Apple Orchard.

Oh, apples, on the apple-tree,
How fair you look! how thick you be!
Some red, some yellow, and some gray,
You ripen slowly day by day,
The sun has touched you, and the rain,
The calm, and then the hurricane.
The drouth has dried you, and the dew
Has drenched; and still you grew and grew.
Oh! apples, on the orchard-tree,
Speak to this heart, its teachers be!
Where'er I find a settled place,
There I should grew with patient face.
Let bud yield room to blossom's suit,
And that in turn to forming fruit.
Below the surface of the mind
A secret sweetening I would find;
And in the heart's deep core enwrought
The mystic seeds of strong love thought.
And by my neighbors I would stand,
And touch them with a gentle hand.
And I would not have over care
If I be high, or low, or where;
But I desire as time shall pass,
A gatherer coming through the grass
With keen, quick eye and ready touch
To pick all fruit, ere ripe too much,
With a broad basket on his arm
To save me from old Winter's harm;
Then at the last, in garner stored,
An offering to the orchard's Lord.

To Keep Sweet Potatoes.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette gives the following as his method of taking care of sweet potatoes:

As soon as well matured, dig them up.—Handle them with care so as to avoid bruising them. As soon as the sun has dried the moist earth adhering to them, pack them in barrels or boxes which do not hold over two bushels each. First, place in the bottom of the box a layer of dry shavings about an inch thick. Those made at plaining mills are well adapted to the purpose. On these place a layer of potatoes, then another of shavings, and so on, until the box is full, covering them finally with two or three inches of shavings. Let the boxes stand a few days without any other cover, to give the moisture an opportunity to escape; and the covers that are put on finally, must not be closed.

The potatoes need some ventilation throughout the winter. Place the boxes in a warm, dry room. For several years past we have kept them in a chamber adjoining the family sitting room. The door between them was kept open, so that the fire of the sitting room would keep the other sufficiently warm. When the weather is very cold, we sometimes throw quilts over the boxes at night, removing them in the morning. One night last winter the mercury sank to twenty-eight degrees below zero, but our potatoes were not injured; the shavings, by their non-conducting quality, retained the warmth received from the fire the preceding day.

This plan answers well for family purposes, when the object is to keep only a few bushels for daily use and for seed.—They are readily accessible, and if care is used as to handling, packing, ventilation, and warmth, few of them will be lost.—We had them to use the present year until July, and the last cooked were as good as those used the day they were dug.

Are Dwarf Apples Desirable?

This question is now frequently asked, and by many experienced horticulturists. There is much to be said on both sides of the subject. They will not pay for market purposes—that is conceded on all hands; but in the private garden, nothing in the way of fruit trees is more ornamental than a finely formed specimen of dwarf apple in full bearing. The fruit is always of larger size and more beautifully colored that when grown on the usually free root, and therefore for exhibition purposes they excel.

Some growers prefer their trees worked on paradise apple, thus making a smaller tree, and one that is more readily kept within proper bounds; but, says the nursery man, the plants are so small and trifling that customers want something more showy for their money, and we are in consequence obliged to use the Doucin root, which enables us to grow a larger tree within the space of time. But this larger size is at the expense of quality, for nothing but severe root pruning will keep them within proper bounds.

The borer is more severe on the dwarf roots than on the standard, and must be closely watched; branches should have an annual shortening in roots must be curtained; and, lastly, the soil should be enriched every season. Thinning out the fruit is an absolute necessity; bearing in mind that we want only extra fine specimens, therefore the inferior sized fruit must be taken off before we commence removing those well shaped. Now what kinds shall we plant? The most satisfaction is derived from Summer and Autumn varieties, as we grow them for pleasure more than profit, and only those should be selected which are handsome in appearance.—Tribune.

GLANDERS.—Is it safe to put a healthy horse in a stall recently occupied by one having the glanders?—P. D. V. ANS.

No. The nasal discharges may communicate the disease to the sound horse which is afterward placed in the same stall formerly occupied by the diseased one.—The discharge adheres to the manger and other parts of the woodwork of the stall.—The cleaning of the manger and other parts of the stall may be effected by scrubbing them with strong solutions of carbolic soap or potash and soda, and with a solution of chloride of lime using a shovelfu of it to a pailful of water.—American Stock Journal.

DO NOT work a colt too hard during his third year. From some cause, a young horse is not as able for hard work from three to three and one-half years old, as he was at two and one-half, and we are satisfied that many horses are permanently injured by too hard work and improper treatment at this time of life. It is an old saying that each year saved before the animal is five years old, is equal to three in its old age.

VINEGAR BITTERS.

PURELY VEGETABE.

FREE FROM ALCOHOL.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflamation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

Dr. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters act on all these cases in a similar manner. By purifying the Blood they remove the cause, and by resolving away the effects of the inflammation (the tubuecular deposits) the affected parts receive health, and a permanent cure is affected.

If men will enjoy good health, let them use Vinegar Bitters as a medicine, and avoid the use of alcoholic stimulants in every form.

PROTECT YOUR BUILDINGS!

Which may be done with less than quarter the usual expense by the use of GLINE'S PATENT SLATE ROOFING PAINT. A roof may be covered with a very cheap shingle, and by the application of this slate be made to last from 25 to 30 years. Old roofs can be patched and coated and made to look much better and last longer than new shingles without the Slate, for ONE-THIRD the COST of RE-SHINGLING. The cost of Slating new Shingles is only about the cost of simply laying them, and the Slate is FIRE-PROOF against sparks and live coals falling upon it, as may be easily tested by any one, and as appears from the fact that Insurance Companies make the same Tariff that they do for Slated Roofs. For tin and iron it has no equal, as it expands by heat and contracts by cold, and never cracks or scales. For Cemetery fences it is particularly adapted, as it will not corrode in the most exposed places. Roofs covered with Tar Sheathing Felt can be made water tight at a small expense. The Slate or Paint is EXTREMELY CHEAP! two gallons will cover a hundred square feet of Shingle roof, or over four hundred of Tin or Iron. Price of the Slate ready for use is 80 cents per gallon, $16 per half barrel, or $30 per barrel of about 40 gallons, freight from New York added. We furnish and apply the material for $2.50 per 100 square feet freight added. The Paint has a very heavy body, but is easily applied with a 4 or 6 inch coloring brush. On old and rotton shingles it fills up the holes and pores, hardens them, and gives a new and substantial roof that will last for years. On curled or warped shingles, it brings them to their place and keeps them there. It fills up the holes in tin or felting roofs and stops the leak; one coat is equal to ten of ordinary paint. The color of the Slate when first applied is of a dark purple; in about a month it changes to a light uniform slate color, and is, to all intents and purposes, Slate. It is a slow dryer, but rain will not affect it in the least in one hour after it is put on. Roofs examined, estimates of cost given, and when required, will be put in through repair. Orders respectfully solicited. Address B. J. WEISTLING, Jr., Middletown, or R. R. WIESTLING, Huntingdon, Agents for Dauphin, Lancaster, Lebanon, Huntingdon, Bedford, Blair and Cambria counties.

A FEW REASONS

WHY THE

ARION PIANO

IS SUPERIOR TO ALL OTHERS:

The ARION PIANO-FORTE has greater power than any other Piano-Forte manufactured.

It will Stand in Tune Longer, and in its mechanical construction it is more perfect, and, therefore, more durable, than any instrument constructed in the usual modern style.

The arrangement of the Agraffe, the manner of stringing, the peculiar form and arrangement of the Iron Frame

SUPERCEDES ALL OTHERS.

The use of a bar (which is a part of the Iron Frame on a line with the heavy steel stringing,) gives where most needed, and in this respect all other pianoes fail.

The construction of the WREST PLANK, into which the tuning Pins are inserted, is such that it is impossible for the pins to come loosened, or the Wrest Plank itself to split, as is too often the case in other Piano-Fortes.

The Extraordinary Evenness

throughout the scale, the excellent Singing Quality, the
